

How much does Coinbase pay per person for settlement?“Type of settlement”

When Coinbase announces a settlement, many people want to know how much money they'll receive. There isn't one set amount because every settlement works differently.

Some settlements are shared among a huge group of people. The Dogecoin sweepstakes case is a good example. Even though the total fund was big, it had to be divided among hundreds of thousands of users. After fees were taken out, most people only got a few dollars because the money was split so many ways.

Other settlements depend on your personal loss. The 2025 data-breach case works more like insurance. If you lost money because of the breach, Coinbase may pay you back what you lost. If you didn't lose anything, you might not get a payment at all. This means two people in the same settlement can receive very different amounts.

So, there's no single payout amount for everyone. Some settlements give small, equal payments, while others are based on your individual situation. To know what you might receive, first understand which type of settlement it is.
